Guthrie is the 84-year-old mother of "Today" host Savannah Guthrie and has been missing from her home since the early hours of Feb. 1.

The images were taken in the days and weeks leading up to her disappearance and were recovered from three separate cameras — at Guthrie's front door, over her driveway and in the backyard, a law enforcement official close to the Guthrie case tells Fox News. There is no new video.

In a statement to Fox News Digital, the Pima County Sheriff's Department said they are continuing to "analyze various forms of evidence in the Nancy Guthrie case, including material from laboratories as well as images and videos captured by cameras."

"At this time, we will not comment on the details or status of this analysis," they said.

The images were first reported by ABC News and have not been made public. They were described to reporters by sources close to the case.

The revelation comes hours after Pima County Sheriff Chris Nanos told Guthrie's network, NBC, that the suspect could "absolutely" strike again and that there is a danger to the public.

"We believe that it was targeted, but we can't — we're not 100% sure of that," he said in an interview that aired Friday morning. "And so it would be silly to tell people, 'Yea don't worry about it. You're not his target.' No, you could be."

Nancy's life remains in jeopardy because of a series of failures: professional incompetence, a sheriff's refusal of FBI help, and the family's delayed ransom offer.
